Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Does being a "cat person "or a "dog person" (or neither or both) reveal your true personality? Theres a body of research that says it does, and suggests that were probably giving the question short shrift when were scouting out prospective dates or deciding whom to marry; hiring an employee or a nanny; choosing a therapist, dentist or lawyer; or meeting someone new. Its obvious that canines and felines are different in many ways: Owing a dog is a nature and social experience, thanks to the need to walk them. A cute dog especially a puppy or one with an expressive face or impressive ears provides the engine for all manner of social interactions with young and old potential admirers. Impromptu friendships spring up in parks, at dog runs, and in elevators, not to mention on suburban streets and country lanes. Dogs are also a lot more work than cats, which says a lot. Does it mean that the dog person is by nature more accommodating, willing to work harder at relationships, and lives a more complicated life than a cat person? After all, like those who bring the mail, rain nor sleet nor heat nor gloom of night deters the dog owner. On the other hand, the cat person enters into a longer contract, since cats generally live longer than dogs (though not as near as long as parrots, which is a whole other story.) Is the cat owner someone you can trust for the long-haul commitment and quiet evenings at home? Its worth saying that cat "owner" may be a misnomer since cats tend to own their people; that, too, differentiates that cat...
