For the Jew, the deftness of his women must do double work; besides accomplishing its immediate and obvious end, it must serve as a guide-post to lead him back to the cultivation of the manual skill of which the repressive laws of ages deprived him, and which the specialized trades of the present do nothing to foster. On the Jewish side I would emphasize the religious education of girls as distinguished from the Jewish education. Throughout this paper I have avoided a reference to Judaism as a religious system. I kept before my mind Judaism as a mode of living, the national aspect of Judaism, the whole sum of its spiritual and practical manifestations. There are to-day hosts of self-declared Jews who look upon the Jewish religion as one of the Jewish nation s outworn habiliments. It was once, they say, the glory of our nation, and it will ever remain a marvelous expression of the Jewish spirit, of the same Jewish spirit that continues to operate in the nation, and still produces valuable manifestations, though different from those of the past. Such Jews, from their point of view, ought to be as circumspect as the most religious in providing a Jewish education for their children. The history, the language, and the literature, the ceremonials, the forms, and the prayers, though primarily religious in character, have their uses for him in communicating the spirit which he cherishes. But the religious Jew, with his...
